

Screening Works! The 4th Annual Gambling Disorder Screening Day is March 14, 2017

March 7, 2017

During 2014, the Division on Addiction launched a new public health event, Gambling Disorder Screening Day. On this day, organizations from around the world administer a brief screen to their client populations and help connect people with potential gambling-related problems with resources. It's not too late to join the Division on Addiction and its partners for Gambling Disorder Screening Day this year! How can you join? The answer is simple: help promote screening or host a screening day event yourself.

We created this event because although Gambling Disorder has diverse financial, social, psychological, and health-related consequences, few people seek treatment for gambling-related problems. One barrier to treatment seeking might be lack of awareness that a gambling problem exists, both on the part of the individual gambler and on the part of the treatment provider. Therefore, Gambling Disorder Screening Day has two primary aims:

- Our hope is that organizations around the world will use this unifying event to help individuals better understand whether they might have a gambling-related problem.
- In addition, we also seek to provide greater awareness of this issue, particularly among non-specialist providers.

Participation in this event during its first year exceeded our expectations. Continued local, national, and international participation during 2015 and 2016 suggested to us that this event is widely influential and worthy of ongoing support. For example, some treatment organizations have reported back to us that as much as 28% of their clients might be struggling with Gambling Disorder. Without Gambling Disorder Screening Day, it is possible that these individuals might never have become aware of their need for in-depth assessment for Gambling Disorder.

To recognize the early supporters of Gambling Disorder Screening Day, and hopefully encourage others to join this esteemed group, we'd like to thank the following organizations for their partnership in the past and/or for their participation this year:
